Thanks so much Jameson! There is no such resolution before us on the agenda for tonight, but I'm working on figuring out a productive way for the council to weigh in on this matter.

Best,

This is the first I had heard of this issue. And I view the arguments that Burton used in the letter as so wrong as to convince me to do the opposite: urge you to support the movement.

The fact that it is a democracy makes the mechanism of targeted, conditional boycotts, divestment, or sanctions (BDS) more, not less, powerful and appropriate; and disenfranchisement is unlike other human rights violations in that its very nature robs the population to whom it applies of the ability to fight to change it. Furthermore, the argument that other countries are also imperfect is not a good reason to avoid taking action against this case.

I believe strongly in the goal of a democratic Israel which effectively protects all its people from their many enemies in nearby countries. And I believe that BDS is working towards that goal more faithfully than Likud is. I reject the fearmongering arguments of Mr. Burton, and will support you if you do too.
